QUNO on Climate Action

QUNO Geneva supported efforts to strengthen the presence of human rights language in the recent Paris Agreement. We have now completed a publication for people who wish to better understand how human rights obligations, and international “norms” as a whole, are being used to help create more sustainable, effective, and fair climate action.

The paper also describes how these international norms—from the recent Paris Climate Change Agreement, governments’ Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs), and climate science reports—are increasingly being used by citizens in local and national courts to improve their decision makers’ actions on climate change. You can find a copy of the paper at http://www.quno.org/sites/default/files/resources/Climate%20Justice_August_2016.pdf.
